2. According to Article 2, Section 3 of the "Guidelines for Graduate Students' Extension of Supervising Professors and Related Procedures for Degree Examinations" of the school's academic regulations: "Graduate students may only take the degree examination after completing the required subjects and credits (if there are insufficient required subjects and credits in the current semester, the examination can be conducted after the grades are received and meet the graduation credit requirements). If a student proceeds with the degree examination before all grades are received and fails any subject, the results of the degree examination will not be counted..."
3. The English proficiency graduation threshold is in accordance with the "Implementation Points for English Proficiency Requirements for Students" of the school's academic regulations.
4. Only check if applying for a delay in the public release of the thesis. The principle for the thesis is public disclosure, with exceptions made based on the National Central Library's document. In accordance with the new version of the "National Central Library Application Form for Delayed Public Release of Thesis," the options for application under the Degree Conferral Act are "involves confidential or patent matters (must have an application case number when submitted to the National Central Library) or cannot be provided by law." The reason option "Preparing for thesis submission" has been deleted, effective from the academic year 109. Graduate students at this university applying for a delay in the public release of their thesis should submit an application to the department at the time of applying for the degree examination and obtain approval through the department's dedicated meeting (the "Degree Examination Application Review Form" adds the option to check for delayed public release). Graduate students who do not apply for "Delayed Public Release of Thesis" when applying for the degree examination are not allowed to submit the application later (the 109th Academic Affairs Meeting). Starting from the academic year 110, when applying for a delayed public release of the thesis (print and electronic files), students should submit supplementary supporting documents for departmental review.
